The Rumanian shipyards of Galati are under the direct supervision of the Securitate (Security Police). There are about 7,000 workers employed who during 1951 agitated for higher salaries and better working conditions. As a result of several incidents between the workers and the Communist informers, the Security Police made a series of arrests for "violation of work discipline." Some of those arrested were later released and sent back to work. About 41 workers, reportedly, were imprisoned or sent to a concentration camp to do hard labor. To prevent any future outbreak or manifestations of malcontent, the Securitate has established itself as a permanent guard in the shipyards.
